A TEXTBOOK ON MUSLIM LAW
by
David Pearl
[Croom Helm, London, Paperback $6.95]

Dr. David Pearl is a lecturer in the University of Cambridge and he has made the Muslim Law of India, Pakistan and Bangladesh his special field of interest. He lectures on Muslim Law and he has been accepted as an expert in a number of cases dealing with Muslim Law in England. He might be said to represent the younger group of lecturers who will succeed such specialists as Sir Norman Anderson and Prof. Noel Coulson. His book on the Muslim Law is therefore interesting as showing how the younger academics in England approach the subject of Muslim Law.

At the outset it may be said that the book suffers from two defects. In the first place it relies almost exclusively on the orientalist who have written on Muslim Law. In his introductory chapter on the Historical Development of Islamic Law, Dr. Pearl relies on the writings of Joseph Schacht and Prof. Coulson. No reference is made to the writings of Muslim scholars, not even to those who have written in English like Prof. Hamidullah, Prof. S.M. Yusuf and Dr. Azmi. The result is that the picture given of the development of Muslim Law is not in line with the Islamic tradition. Dr. Pearl tries to be fair and at page 13 he says "The essential point is simply this: even if the historical criticisms of Schacht (moderated or not by Coulson) are accepted, after Shafii the concept of Sunnah as he had expounded it was accepted by the scholars and the resultant compilations of Hadith become the primary code of Islamic jurisprudence". But why do English scholars ignore the researches of the Muslim scholars?

The second defect is that although the book is called a textbook on Muslim Law it deals mainly with the Muslim Law in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh. Although Dr. Pearl says in his preface that other Muslim countries are not ignored in the book, in fact the book only refers to the law in the other Muslim countries by way of comparison with the law in the
